The Cervantes Institute at Harvard University organizes its sixth annual symposium, this year virtually and with the general subject: "Hispanism and Spanish in the U.S. over the Last 30 Years." The conference program includes two keynote lectures by prestigious researchers: Luis Girón Negrón (Professor of Romance Languages and Literatures and Chair of the Department of Comparative Literature at Harvard University) and James Fernández (Professor of Spanish Literature and Culture at New York University and Director of NYU Madrid). In addition, the program will feature presentations by researchers who are beginning their professional careers as well as by experts in the fields of Spanish language and Hispanic cultures, who will share unpublished papers covering diverse topics: Spanish language, sociolinguistics, Spanish-language teaching, teacher training, cinema, literature, translation, migration, and identity.

El Instituto Cervantes en Harvard University organiza su sexto simposio anual, este año en línea y con el tema general: "Hispanism and Spanish in the U.S. over the Last 30 Years". El programa incluye dos conferencias plenarias a cargo de prestigiosos investigadores: Luis Girón Negrón (Professor of Romance Languages and Literatures y Chair of the Department of Comparative Literature en Harvard University) y James Fernández (Professor of Spanish Literature and Culture en New York University y Director of NYU Madrid). Igualmente, habrá presentaciones por parte de investigadores que están comenzando su trayectoria profesional así como de expertos en los campos de lengua española y culturas hispánicas, que presentarán comunicaciones inéditas en diversos ámbitos: lengua española, sociolingüística, enseñanza del español, formación de profesores, cine, literatura, traducción, migración e identidad.

Language: English and Spanish
